Financial Spring Cleaning

Ah, spring is here. It's time for the weather to get warmer, time for the flowers to bloom and time for you to file your tax returns.

Once you've filed, you'll be ready to toss those paper records as part of your spring cleaning routine, right? If you don't know what you should keep or shred, PFCU offers tips to help you clear away the clutter.

What to Keep

- Keep your income tax returns and supporting documents for a minimum of three years. If you're self-employed, keep supporting tax documents for six years. Once the time elapses, shred them.
- Save year-end investment statements for at least three years. Hold onto quarterly statements until you receive your annual statements and have confirmed that the numbers match. Be sure to keep records that show the initial purchase price for stocks and mutual funds so you can calculate your basis when you sell them.
- Keep records pertaining to your house as long as you live in it. Records showing your purchase price, and what you spent on improvements, may help when trying to prove the value of your home to potential buyers. After selling, keep documents for three years.
- Hold onto records showing how much money went into and came out of Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs) and 401(k)s – especially if you've made any nondeductible contributions – so you don't overpay taxes when you withdraw the money.
- Keeping financial records helps you track your spending, create budgets and provide proof of payment when needed. Keep financial statements and cancelled checks for one year unless you are using them for tax purposes, then keep them for three years.
- If you have loans and certificates of deposit, store the original documentation somewhere safe and keep the most current statements. When loans are paid off, or accounts are closed, shred the records.
- Hold onto sales receipts until the product warranty or the return/exchange period expires. If you need sales receipts for tax purposes, keep them for three years.
- Keep paid medical bills for one year so that you can see if they qualify for a deduction on your tax forms. Typically, medical and dental expenses exceeding 7.5 percent of your income qualify. Check IRS Publication 502 at www.irs.gov for more information.

What to Toss

- Financial receipts such as ATM receipts, withdrawal and deposit slips, debit and credit card receipts can go through the shredder, after you've checked them against your monthly statements.

- Keep paycheck stubs only until you receive your Form W-2 at the end of the year, then shred them.
- You can get rid of paper copies of most monthly bills – for things like credit cards, utilities and cable TV – unless you need them for tax purposes, and then keep them for three years.

Getting rid of financial clutter from your life will help keep your financial path clear. Don't forget to revisit your filing system from time to time. Having an occasional "shred fest" is as good for your spirit as it is for the integrity of your record-keeping system. For information on keeping good records, check IRS Publication 552 at www.irs.gov.
